

Vows that include Children

My love, You have already given me the two greatest gifts of my life:
your love, and our beautiful child.

Today, it is my honor to become your wife/husband.

I promise to continue building our family together,
celebrating our joy, comforting one another in hard times,
and strengthening our family's future.

I vow to love and cherish you for all the days of my life.

Another idea: As the couple exchange rings as a symbol of their commitment and love they could also include a gift for their child/children as a symbol of family unity, commitment, and love for all

- (Bride) and (Groom) today you are promising your love to one another, and you are pledging your love to your child/children as well, committing to them and to each other to create a family together.
- (Child's Name), your parents would like to present this gift to you as a symbol of their commitment, trust, and love.

As the two of us are joined on this day, we become part of each other:
your feelings become my feelings;
your sorrows become my sorrows;
your joys become my joys;
your cares become my cares,
and your children become my children.

With your help and guidance I promise to be a true and faithful spouse / wife / husband and parent,
always there to comfort you, rejoice with you,
and endure all the complexities of life that we will face together as a family.
My love for you and your/our child/ren is pure and unshakable, and I hereby commit myself to all of you from this day forward

Vows to Children

I would also like to say a vow to you, Molly:
I promise to always hold your hand and skip with you down the street and bring comfort to your life,” he said. “I vow to show you how a man should treat a woman in my relationship with your mother, and above all else I vow to protect you, care for you, and love you forever.”
